Helen Hayes Brown and Jessie Glendenning Have Parts in "Prodigal Husband."

John Drew will have a wenderful wessen this year. In "The Producal Husband's he has the most unusual play that has been turned out in a long ime. We haven't read the play-but it is a wonder. We know it because it is to have two distinguished young women playing the part of the leading lady! Really!! And the chances of its success are greatly enhanced by the fact that the two leading women are both what might be called Washingtonians. Washingtonian, you know, is any tson who accepts money for living it trus city. One has to live a certain length of time in other places, and there is more or less profit in acquiring a residence in them. But in Washington the only profit comes to the lawyers when one tries to prove that he is a resident or that somebody else isn't.

resident or that somebody else isn't.

However, that hasn't anything to do with Jessie Glendenning and Helen Hayes Brown, who are to be John Deew's "leading lady" this season. You know them both, of course. There isn't anybody who has gone to the theater for the last five years or has been nywhere that the nice people of the District go, who doesn't know Jessie Glendenning. Miss Glendenning was incenue of the Columbia Piayers for several seasons, and a social favorite of no mean attractions.

In fact she is one of the most attractive ingenue social favorites it has ever been our pleasure to meet. She knows all there is to know about acting. She was practically born on the ne She was practically born on the stage, and has been playing parts before the public since she was two or three years old. A daughter of John Glendenning, the wife of Everett Butterfield, and the relative of a dozen or more stage people. Miss Glendenning is an actress by inheritance, as well as by sheer force of her own beauty Helen Hayes Brown is a different kind Washingtonian—she was born here. And Helen Hayes is going to here. And Helen Haves is going to have the first whack at the business of being John Drew's leading lady. You see but of course everybody in Washington knows the child actress who has pleased so much. She takes the part of John Drew's leading woman before the woman grows up. And her brief experience on the stage has been so notable that most of her friends are assured she will do it well.

It is a curious coincidence that both Miss Glendenning and Miss Brown, while there is a slight divergence in years—one is a child and the other a woman—have the same type of beauty, and do not look unlike. They might easily be mistaken for sisters. The are not relatives, but they'll do a bit of neat sister turning when they carry the burdens of a John Drew lead for entire season.
